

Dear Ms Moscogiuri, Ms Horton and Mr Ruthven,

Seen in Health is a network of clinicians, researchers and health-sector professionals committed to restoring accuracy, evidence-based practice and impartiality in discussions relating to sex and gender in the NHS workplace.

We are writing regarding your publication A Growing Threat – The Anti-Rights Movement in the UK, released on 8 July 2026 and removed shortly afterwards.

Your report wrongly labelled several UK organisations, including Seen in Health, as “anti-rights”, and linked gender-critical groups to misogyny, homophobia and anti-abortion activism.

These claims are inaccurate, misleading and seriously harmful.

Seen In Health has never opposed the rights of women, LGB people, or those who identify as transgender. Nor have we ever campaigned on abortion. Presenting us as part of an “anti-rights” movement misinforms the public and damages our reputation.

The report also described organisations supporting parents, detransitioners and young people as engaging in “conversion practices”. This is a serious allegation presented without evidence.

Given Amnesty International’s influence, these mischaracterisations carry significant weight.

We therefore request that Amnesty issue a clear public apology and correction addressing the false statements made about Seen in Health and other groups.

We would also appreciate confirmation that this matter is being formally reviewed.

Yours sincerely,
SEEN in Health co-chairs
